

I do not like this consolidation of radio stations which allows many conglomerates owning the majority of radio stations. It makes radio so homogenized that after you listen to the radio for 15 minutes, you'd want to turn the radio off. When it is music time, there is a lot of music out there that will never be heard on the radio because of programmers being so selective in their music resulting in the same music over and over again, in spite of the "More Music, better variety," "Good times, great oldies," "Classic Rock That Really Rocks," type of advertising claims. Years ago, top 40 radio actually played a variety of all kinds of music that charted in the top 40 resulting in Frank Sinatra type of music and Buddy Holly type of music being played back to back, now top 40 radio doesn't play all of the songs that are on Billboard's top 40 singles chart. Many country radio stations no longer play music by legendary country artists no matter how new or old the music is except for specialty stations or special programs and listeners want to hear this music on their local radio stations. Clear Channel is unfortunately owning so many radio stations to the point that they are influence many small market radio stations. Clear Channel is the devil of mass media.
